HOW DO CORPORATE GOVERNANCE STRUCTURES IN CANADA DIFFER FROM THOSE IN THE U.S.?

Corporate governance is the relationship between shareholders, board directors and managers in determining the direction and performance of the corporation. Governance defines the powers and duties of the various parties and establishes the rules for how corporations govern themselves. Ultimately, corporations are accountable to their investors and good corporate governance helps to protect them.

The United States and Canada are close neighbors. Geographical proximity makes it easy for corporations to have equity stakes in both countries. This gives them the option of establishing their headquarters in either country. Deciding which country to establish their headquarters in is a significant decision because of the differences in each country's approach to corporate governance.

Diligent, a leading provider of board management software, shares insights on the difference between Canadian and U.S. board governance - click here to access this blog entry.

CANADA'S REIT SECTOR: A LONG WAY FROM JURASSIC PARK

Last week, TMX had the honour of hosting some of Canada's largest real estate companies to mark the 25th anniversary of Real Estate Investment Trusts (REITs) in Canada and their first listing on the Toronto Stock Exchange (TSX).

The quarter-century mark is a significant milestone, but what's even more impressive is the rate at which REITs have grown on TSX and TSXV during that time.
